- 28 Bauhaus. Arndt, Gertrud (1903-2000). Original watercolour, gouache over pencil: ["Two Sailing Boats"]. Multi-layer paint application. [Without year; after 1927]. 24 x 35.4 cm. Signed in pencil lower right. Inscribed on the reverse by an other hand. EUR 4.500

Gertrud Arndt's family had lived in Erfurt since 1916, where she did an apprenticeship in Karl Meinhardt's architectural office from 1919 and began taking photographs for the company. She attended the School of Arts and Crafts in Erfurt with the aim of becoming an architect. In the winter semester of 1923 she was accepted for the preliminary course at the Bauhaus Weimar, where she had lessons with Paul Klee and László Moholy-Nagy. She was not able to realize her desire to train as an architect at the Bauhaus, instead she received an apprenticeship in the weaving workshop at the Bauhaus. After three years, she passed the journeyman's examination at the weaving guild in Glauchau. A knotted carpet based on her design was ordered from the Bauhaus by the Hamburg shipowner Eberhard Thost, and a carpet that was temporarily in Walter Gropius' director's office in Weimar was later rewoven according to the templates. After completing her training, she no longer pursued textile work. In addition, she improved her photographic techniques self-taught. In 1927 she married the Bauhaus graduate Alfred Arndt and moved with him to Probstzella, where he was involved as an architect in the construction of the House of the People. They had two children, Gertrud Arndt took care of the family, her own career dream had not come true. When Alfred Arndt was appointed to the Bauhaus by the Bauhaus director Hannes Meyer in 1929, the Arndts returned to the Dessau Bauhaus and moved into one of the Masters' Houses on Burgkühnauer Allee. Alfred Arndt became head of the finishing workshop, in which the metal workshop, carpentry and wall painting were combined. There, Gertrud Arndt also used the bathroom as a darkroom. The couple was friends with Gunta Stölzl. During this time, Walter Peterhans built up the systematic teaching in photography at the Bauhaus, Arndt did not take part in them because she already mastered the technical aspects taught there. After the politically motivated closure of the Bauhaus in 1932, Alfred Arndt worked again in Probstzella, Gertrud Arndt took care of the family. In 1948 the family fled from the Soviet zone to West Germany and settled in Darmstadt. There is an extensive collection of Gertrud Arndt's amateur photos from the years 1926 to 1932, which she developed herself at home. In 1929/30 Arndt created a series of 43 self-portraits, which she called "Mask Portraits". She also portrayed her fellow Bauhaus student Otti Berger. Her photographic work was only discovered by Ute Eskildsen for Bauhaus research in 1979 with an exhibition in the Museum Folkwang. (Source: wikipedia, thank you!).

le charmant, doux et frais matin, qui fleurit la menthe et le thym, a parsemé tout le jardin de gouttelettes irisées qui sont des perles du rosée...

Chloris, légère et mi-vêtue, courant sur l'herbe ruse et drue, a gagné les haquets qui bordent le bassin,
...bientôt, rose et blonde, elle est nue...

elle attend... sans savoir qu'un petit dieu velu, aux pieds de bout, au front cornu, masqué par un réseau de feuilles et de branches,
